Business hotspot

The Safari Court Hotel in Windhoek is one of the Namibian city's best-known and favourite hotels. It started as a motel 50 years ago and has grown into a larger establishment, being the first in the country to offer a buffet service and banqueting facilities.

Now the four-star, family-run establishment has 215 rooms (including a Presidential Suite), a choice of restaurants and bars, conferencing facilities, a beautiful outdoor area and pool, a gym and the Okulole Day Spa & Wellness Centre.

A mere 4km from the city centre, adjacent to Eros Airport (Windhoek's domestic and charter air terminal) and 45km from Hosea Kutako International Airport, it's the ideal spot from which to do business or escape for some downtime. There's also a free weekday return shuttle service to the city centre on the hour. The hotel recently introduced an eight-course fine dining and wine pairing concept. ### 'Tis the season...

This holiday season, try doing something as simple – but life-altering – as buying a SIM card for a South African who needs free Internet access. That, in turn, means free educational content and life-saving information on their mobile phone.

The Internet of Good Things (IoGT) is an initiative led by Unicef that provides free access (it's partnered with Free Basics by Facebook and Cell C) to a mobile website to find vital information about everything from health to sanitation, safety, education and equity. Also available is Unicef's Early Life tips, providing parents, families, caregivers and healthcare providers with practical guidelines and activities that can improve young children's health. The only thing needed is a web-enabled mobile phone and a Cell C SIM card.

The data's entirely free of charge. Visit www.freebasics.com (from your Cell C mobile phone) or visit za.goodinternet.org directly. Here are three other ways you can reach out to those in need:

GETTING AROUND: "Put the phone/digital guide down and talk to the locals. Asking questions can lead to the best travel experiences you'll ever have. While technology's a great enabler, it can suck the romance out of travel. Start conversations instead."

TRAVEL ESSENTIALS: "A backpack, a notebook and the right playlist. Every trip needs the right soundtrack."

FAVOURITE DESTINATION: "Iceland. It's the greatest adventure playground God ever created, inhabited by the kindest people you'll ever meet." — Daniel Scheffer
